Creating and Maintaining Safe Relationships and Personal Boundaries

It is critical that people with disabilities know how to keep themselves safe and understand the "relationship spectrum." In this workshop adults with disabilities and their families will explore the risks of being in a relationship, learn how to set boundaries and avoid exploitation, identify support systems and discuss what it means to be in a healthy and safe relationship.

Educator: Jacqueline Wood, FAU-Center for Autism & Related Disabilities

Understanding Transition Options - Preparing for the Future

When children with developmental disabilities age out of the school system, parents often describe feeling as though they have fallen off a cliff. All the supports and resources that were in place throughout childhood are now gone. This workshop helps families prepare for their child's future by identifying the different transition options and guiding them to appropriate community resources that can help support their adult children.

Educator: Nathalie Roman, UM-NSU-Center for Autism & Related Disabilities

Age Appropriate Strategies for Rewarding Behaviors

Parents will often use a reward system to encourage their child's good behaviors. This is especially true if your "child" is an adult with a developmental disability. This workshop offers strategies on how to positively reinforce good behaviors based on your child's age, ability level and preferences.
